What our members are s

My experience with one-on-one training and small group training has been awesome and productive. I would recommend this type of training because you can train at your own level. If there are multiple people training together it is not a competition. The trainers adjust everything to each person's level of fitness and limitations.

You will learn how the 4 Pillars of Fitness work together and why they're critical in achieving your goals

THE 4 PILLARS OF FITNESS

1 NUTRITION

You can't out-exercise this. Fuel your transformation with foods you actually enjoy.

THE FIRST PILLAR

Nutrition is 100% responsible for exercise-induced results. If you don't eat, but through happen. If you eat the wrong things, nothing happens. Think of it this way: if you're exercising, give an athlete, and your body needs to be fueled properly during the other 23 hours a day to maximize results.

Your customized 1st Pillar Plan will teach you:

- CALORIES: The amount required by your goal
- COMPOSITION: Fuel your body by choosing the right combination
- TIMING: Refuel better and recover faster

2 EXERCISE AND MOVEMENT

Customized workouts stimulate progress and keep your body changing.

THE SECOND PILLAR

Exercise is the body's stimulus for change. Whether you choose strength training, endurance training or a combination of both, there are four variables that will ensure that your body is given the appropriate stimulus for change.

Your customized 2nd Pillar Plan will teach you P.I.X.E.:

3 SUPPLEMENTATION

Fill your nutrient gaps with a personalized plan to speed your results.

THE THIRD PILLAR

Exercise increases the body's nutrient needs, but it's difficult to meet those needs without gaining weight. Safe and effective supplementation can satisfy your nutrient needs without adding calories, improve your workouts, speed recovery and avoid plateaus.

Not all supplements are created equally, so we use a professional screening process to give you a customized supplement plan. You'll learn:

- HOW TO FILL YOUR ESSENTIAL NUTRIENT GAPS

what is group personal training and does it work?

by Eric C. Stevens

Group personal training has become somewhat of a buzzword in recent years as small exercise studios are in and the big box gyms are out. People nowadays want personalized workouts and individual attention without paying the hefty price of one-on-one training. Enter the latest fitness craze - group personal training.

It used to be that doing fitness meant one of three things:

- You were a lone wolf gym rat.
- You did group exercises classes (jazzercise, aerobics, etc.).
- You hired a personal trainer to whip your butt into shape.

Wikipedia defines a personal trainer as "a fitness professional involved in exercise prescription and instruction." But in use, the term has become synonymous with one-on-one training, even though customized exercise prescription and instruction is certainly not limited to a one-on-one construct. In recent years, we in fitness have discovered that you can work in a small group and still receive that personal attention and individualized workout.

While it may be the latest fitness trend, group personal training isn't going anywhere. Why? Because it works and it's cost effective, especially when compared with its high priced cousin, personal (or private) training.

How Is Group Personal Training Different From Exercise Class?

An exercise class is a formatted class that the entire group follows. Zumba, step aerobics, and BodyPump are examples of a group exercise classes. You show up and perform the motions that are being demonstrated or cued. A group exercise class is basically choreographed in that the entire group more or less is doing the same thing. In a group exercise setting, the teacher instructs, and the students follow.

Conversely, group personal training is different because of that operative word, personal. Group personal trainers do one thing differently than an exercise instructor - they coach. In a group personal training setting, students are often doing different things at their own customized level of fitness or ability.

While a group exercise class looks much like a choreographed dance, a group personal training class looks like a group of people doing different exercises together at their own rate of speed, intensity, and ability. Group exercise classes are typically larger and limited only by space available, while group personal training classes tend to be smaller in scale.

The Advantages to Group Personal Training

The obvious advantage of group personal training as compared to one-on-one training is cost. For years while I was a personal trainer, my clients were paying me roughly $1,000 a month for one-on-one training. My clients now pay $100-150 a month for group training. A lot of people will shell out a hundred bucks a month for good instruction, great workouts, and solid results. Not a lot of people can or will pay a thousand bucks a month for the same thing.

In addition to cost savings, with group personal training you get the added benefit of motivation from both your peers and the instructor. There is more energy in a group setting and even a little bit of good, old-fashioned competition. It's just human nature that if the person next to you is giving an all out effort, you are more likely to do the same.

In a one-on-one session, if you don't feel like working hard, you don't. I consider myself a pretty decent motivator, but I have had plenty of one-on-one clients who didn't feel like putting forth effort, so they didn't. Pulling out every trick in the book, even the best trainer can't motivate an unmotivated person. In a group though, people tend to give their best.

The Bottom Line on Group Personal Training

What number of people distinguishes group personal training from a group exercise class? It's a valid question. Having taught in a group personal training setting for years, there is a point of diminished contact with the instructor when the group gets too large. That is, at a certain point, no matter what the format of a class, a large group becomes in essence simply a group exercise class.

If you are signing up for group personal training and it is your intention to receive that one-on-one contact, corrected form, and individual focus, then you need to scrutinize when and where you go. Beyond the range of fifteen to twenty people, it's difficult for the instructor to give much personal attention. When a class gets to that size, it's simply another exercise class.

So, here's my bottom line take on group personal training.

If you are looking for an intense workout, getting motivated into shape, or simply to lose a few pounds, then go to a group personal training studio or class. You don't need your own individual personal trainer to get a great workout. Group personal training is a great option at a fraction of the cost of one-to-one personal training.

However, if you are looking for specific skill-based improvement, improved movement functionality, or improved posture and alignment, then spend the money and hire a one-on-one trainer. In the end, there isn't a replacement for that private coaching, but having it will cost you.

diet in the d e t a i l

by Peter San Nicolas
Owner, TG Ramona

The saying “You can Never Out train a Bad Diet” will always hold true unless you’re an Olympic Swimmer or Decathlete. These athletes, under extreme training burn so many calories it’s a chore to eat enough. I’m assuming that this isn’t you, and that you’re the average American that sits on your hind-side 50% of the day and is looking to lose that 10-50 pounds you’ve accumulated since college. Let’s face it, left to the will of your daily schedule, you move significantly less than your parents did, and probably 75% less than your great grandparents.

This creates quite a problem when combined with the ease of acquiring food and the dense calories of most people’s food choices. We burn a lot less calories than 100 years ago, and eat a whole lot more than we need. This all equates to an uphill battle against the bulge.

I’m guessing you’re either on a diet, thinking about getting on one, or have been on one in the past. That darn “D” word! I hate it! Let’s face it, there’s a lot of diets out there, and guess what, they almost all work. The problem is they have a beginning and an end. At the end people usually revert back to their old ways. I challenge you to stop jumping on the latest fad diet and start paying attention to the other “D” word... DETAILS! Here’s what I mean by the details. It’s all the little details that add up and will sabotage your whole day. Dressings, nuts and seeds, a taste here, and chip there. Some bread brought out before your meal. Guacamole here and a sprinkle of cheese there. The little things add up. Let’s play out the scenario.

You’ve decided to follow a proper eating plan consisting of four “meals” or eating times, per day, adding up to 1500 calories. This is perfect to help you lose 1.5 lbs per week. Your daily activities add up to 2250 calories burned and creates a 750 calorie deficit, which then has you burning 5250 calories of body fat off per week, aka 1.5 lbs of fat off your body. In 16 weeks you’ll be down 24 pounds!! Now let’s take a peak at the details from sun up to sun down that can easily sabotage this phenomenal success.

It all starts with your coffee. Have you really ever measured out a 50-70 calorie serving of creamer. You know, two tablespoons? Scratch that. It’s actually teaspoons, but who’s measuring? You think “Oh, it can’t make that much of a difference.” It can! Most people pour about 4 times the proper serving adding a total of 200-280 calories to their coffee. Always pay attention to the liquids you drink. It’s the fastest way to increase your calories.

Next, your making lunch for your kids. You’re doing the right thing, being the better parent by making a lunch. While you’re doing so you nibble a few fish crackers. Probably 8-10. No biggie it’s only 30 calories. Kids are off to school and you head into the office where, sweet Jennie, bless her heart, always keeps a nice stock of dark chocolates in a bowl at the reception area. Just one fun size Mr. Goodbar can’t hurt. After all it’s a fun size. Add 50 calories.

Finally it’s lunch and you head to the organic farm-to-table place that has those amazing salads! Yum! Eating healthy never felt or tasted so good! You order that quinoa salad, it’s all the craze. Ch’ching add it up. Did you know quinoa has just as many calories as rice, or a potato? It’s definitely healthy and has tons of nutrients, but buyer beware it’s not low calorie. Don’t forget the pesto sauce. Whoops, we just ate a 1000 calorie salad. Truthfully, are you really going to need that amount of energy while you click away sitting at your keyboard for four more hours? Uh, NO!

You’re feeling good about yourself! You had coffee and skipped the latte, had one fun size candy instead of the donut, ate a salad for lunch and now you’ve got dinner planned. I can smell it now, fish and gluten free pasta! Everyone says you have to have salmon, it has omega 3 fatty acids, it's oh so good for your hair and skin, heart and cognitive synapses. Oh, you can't forget that gluten free pasta. It's better on your gut and digestion. After all that's why you've haven't been able to lose weight. You can't digest the food properly and your body is just holding on to it. I have a feeling it's maybe a few other reasons other than your mild to insignificant gluten allergy. These are all healthy choices that are truly very good for you. Honestly, I love all of these food choices. The salmon is great, but realize this, one serving of salmon is 2-3 oz and is 233 calories. Almost guaranteed, the portion you ate, unmeasured, is about 6-8 oz. Multiply 233 times 3.5 and you have 815 calories, almost 600 more than a proper serving. But wait there's more (insert cheesy game show host announcer voice), the gluten free pasta! 1 cup is 233 calories. Add that, yes healthy, but also very hearty dinner. 1048 KILOCALORIES!!! OMG!

Ready to recap just the extra details?

Breakfast extra 200

Lunch making nibble 30

Fun size Mr. Goodbar 50

Farm fresh fill up 500

Filled to the gills dinner 548

Grand Total of EXTRAS 1328!!

Yes this may be just a bit of an exaggeration, but it's not too far from the truth. It's no wonder why people get so frustrated thinking they are eating healthy and in reality they are, but if you don't pay attention to the DETAILS of serving size, macro nutrients, and snacking habits, one can become extremely discouraged and throw in the towel. Don't give up, get detailed and pay attention to what you are putting into your body. You only get one body and it's an amazing machine capable of spectacular feats. The downsizing is in the details!!

what are the benefits of a protein shake?

by Josh McCarron

Protein shakes refer to some form of protein powder combined with a liquid and often other ingredients, then blended into a drink and consumed after a workout or as a meal replacement. Traditionally a drink for bodybuilders, protein shakes have become popular with all types of people to enhance exercise and diet goals. The protein commonly used in protein shakes often comes from whey--which is derived from cow's milk--soy and hemp. Adding protein shakes to your lifestyle can provide several benefits.

WEIGHT CONTROL

Used as a meal replacement, protein shakes are enable you to control your fat and calorie intake, which is beneficial to weight management. Portion control is a major problem for many people, and since many protein powders have controlled portions of calories, fat, protein and carbohydrates, it makes your job easier, says the Quick Weight Loss Principle website.

MUSCLE BUILDING

When you exercise, whether it is with resistance training or not, muscle tissues are torn and must be rebuilt for your muscles to develop, and protein shakes will help the rebuilding process, according to Straight Health. Drinking protein shakes enables you to control the amount of protein you are consuming, and since it is in liquid form it will enter your bloodstream faster and get to work.

CONVENIENCE

Trying to consume a high amount of quality protein through solid food can take a lot of preparation and be quite time consuming. For those situations where you may be short on time, a protein shake offers the luxury of quality ingredients in a convenient package.

NUTRIENT INTAKE

One of the main benefits of making and consuming protein shakes is the opportunity to add a multitude of other nutrients along with the protein powder. In one drink, you can enjoy the benefits of protein, frozen berries, flaxseed oil, aloe vera gel, coconut oil, natural peanut butter, plus any other foods or supplements you may want. You will have to experiment so your additions don't make the shake unpalatable, but your options for added nutrition are abundant.

Small group training is perfect for clientele that have specific goals, and those who do not prefer to train in larger groups. These groups are often specialized; learning a specific skill such as barbell, bodyweight or kettlebell training. The emphasis is on building a training program for the individual while working on corrective strategies to help clients improve any movement restrictions. Small group personal training is suitable for all levels of fitness as the group practices the skill being taught at their own ability. Members can join an existing small group training.

There's no magic number of times you should hit the gym every week. How often you go depends on your body, your fitness goals, and your schedule. Still, there are some general guidelines: running on treadmill at gym

General fitness: 4 - 5 days per week

Weight loss: 5 - 6 days per week

Muscle building: 3 - 4 days per week

Let's take a closer look at each.

IF YOU WANT TO IMPROVE YOUR GENERAL FITNESS AND KEEP IN SHAPE...

...GO TO THE GYM FOUR TO FIVE DAYS A WEEK.

If your goal is greater endurance or burning calories, try three days of cardio and two of strength training. If your goal is building strength and muscle tone, reverse that. You could also switch each week to keep things balanced.

Your two off days are "active rest." It's important to engage in at least 30 minutes of physical activity per day to maintain good health, even though you aren't working out. This could include taking a walk around your neighborhood (or the gym track), playing ball with your kids, or even doing yard work or chores.

Benefits: A four to five day a week gym schedule allows for a balanced workout routine. It keeps you active and in the habit of going to the gym, while still allowing your body time to recover between workouts. Many people find that they just feel better when they've been to the gym!

Potential Risks: If you've got a packed schedule, it may be difficult to work in four to five gym sessions. Once you start missing workouts, it's easy to get frustrated and out of the habit. Cut back to three days instead and make the most of them. HIIT is a great way to make the most of limited gym time.

When you're at the gym nearly every day, you may get bored with your routine if you're doing the same things constantly. Your body will get bored, too, and you won't be able to maintain a useful intensity. Mix things up! Venture out from the machines and try a group fitness class. Learn kickboxing or dance. Hit the pool. Try tennis or meet some friends for a pickup basketball game. Check out barre or Pilates. You're more likely to stay motivated if you have something new and exciting to look forward to.

IF YOUR GOAL IS TO LOSE WEIGHT (AND BY WEIGHT WE MEAN BODY FAT)...

... GO THE GYM FIVE TO SIX DAYS PER WEEK.

To lose weight, most adults need 60 to 90 minutes of moderately intense physical activity per day while keeping caloric intake in check. This can vary according to your diet, your age, weight, and gender, plus the types of workouts you do.

You don't have to spend all your time on cardio machines or in aerobics class to lose weight. Dedicating two or three days to resistance training will tone and strengthen your muscles while burning calories. Focus on aerobic exercise the other three to four days.

Benefits: Going to the gym five times per week allows you complete your daily workouts in one session, and gives you access to many different ways to exercise. Exercising most days of the week is good not only for weight loss, but for your overall health and well-being.

Possible risks: When weight loss is your goal, it's easy to start out super-motivated about going to the gym and then start to burn out. This is especially true if you weren't active before and are now hitting the gym five days a week. Rather than skipping workouts because you don't feel motivated, try changing things up. Try a dance aerobics class, kickboxing or swimming instead of running on the treadmill every time. Learn a new sport.

You might also try cutting back your gym time and instead ramp up the intensity with HIIT workouts if appropriate for your fitness level. If you're burned out going nearly every day, you could try going three or four days a week and adjusting your workout intensity and/or caloric intake.

What if you're having the opposite problem and working out too much? Overtraining can cause a weight-loss plateau as your body's protective mechanisms kick in, trying to hold on to weight. If you've hit a plateau, and/or you're constantly sore and fatigued, it's time to change up your routine and possibly cut back on the workouts. You may be able to ramp up again once your body has had time to rest and recover.

IF YOUR GOAL IS BUILD MUSCLE...

...LIFT WEIGHTS AT THE GYM THREE TO FOUR DAYS PER WEEK.

On a three to four day schedule, focus on two muscle groups per session. Do not work the same muscles on consecutive days—allow them time to recover. Some people do well on a five to six day a week schedule, working only one muscle group each time.

If you want to go the gym more often, you can...but don't work overwork tired muscles. They need the rest. Instead, try a restorative yoga class. Take advantage of the sauna or whirlpool to ease soreness. Walk around the track.

Benefits: A three to four day schedule allows for adequate rest. Muscles don't grow when you're lifting weights. They grow as they recover and repair themselves between sessions. Your nervous system also needs to recover so you perform exercises correctly. Push your muscles too hard, too often, and you risk plateaus and overuse injuries.

Potential risks: Even when you're allowing rest days, you need to listen to your body. Your body may need more time to repair itself than you've allowed, especially following a particularly intense workout. If a muscle is aching, pay attention. Don't work it again until it stops.

IN GOING TO THE GYM, QUALITY IS MORE IMPORTANT THAN QUANTITY.

What you do at the gym is more important than how often you do it. If you go to the gym almost every day but don't push yourself, use improper form, or wear down your body through overtraining, you're going to less benefit than someone going three times a week and utilizing that time effectively. Consulting a professional trainer is a great way to formulate a fitness plan that works for your goals, body type, and schedule. He or she can help you get the most from your workouts.

Remember too that life is about balance. It's better to commit to a moderate workout schedule that you can maintain than to go full-tilt and get burned out after a month. Going to the gym is about lifelong good health and feeling your best. Find the balance that works best for your life and your goals.

HOW OFTEN SHOULD I GO TO THE GYM?

group fitness

Group exercise offers many advantages that doing workouts on your own just can't match. Our program offers a variety of classes scheduled on a regular basis as well as specialty classes for those who want to pursue different interests.

Why group exercise can work for you:

- Group exercise offers the motivation of being part of a large, enthusiastic, and sometimes rowdy, class of people who want their fitness in a class setting.
- Group exercise can keep your personal schedule on track with workouts that meet at regular times, don't run over, and that get you in, done, and out while feeling that you still had a great workout that day. Your excuse that you didn't have time to workout disappears with group since you're in and out in an hour maximum.
- Group exercise offers a routine for those who want to look forward to their favorite classes and variety for those who like to mix it up to stay fresh and motivated.
